Established in 1999, NGO Women’s Safe House is recognized across Montenegro for their public activism to end violence against women.

One of their most successful campaigns in 2018 focused on the song “NESALOMIVA” (Indestructible) by the Montenegrin women musicians The Voices and KIC POP choir. The song is dedicated to all women who have experienced violence in one form or another. The campaign is conducted within the framework of the EU-UN Women Regional Programme on Ending Violence against Women “Implementing Norms, Changing Minds”, implemented by UNDP in Montenegro.

Pop songs are creative and effective ways to reach the general public with messages on gender equality and ending violence against women. The video, launched during last year’s 16 Days of Activism against Gender-based Violence, has been seen by more than 200,000 people on social media, which represents about a third of the total Montenegrin population.

“With this video, we are sending the message to all the women out there that they are strong, brave, and smart, and hence should not suffer,” said Ljiljana Raičević, President of Women’s Safe House, during the launch of the campaign in Podgorica. Watch the video here.
